Boosie,

Where do I start— You came into this world when your mom just plopped you out and said here, he's yours. We bottle fed you from the get go and you were fine with it, you were always the baby. You never played much, even as a kitten you were all business. You literally took no crap your whole life. You handed out skippty paps to any one that you felt deserved them, and some that didn't, you didn't care, they got them anyway—Even handed one out to Doc the day you passed away, making sure he remembers who's boss around here. You demanded respect and the only one that wasn't terrified of your presence was little 5 pound Molly.

I found myself over the years having to explain to people that at the time, I only had one dog and it was the cat that they heard growling. You bit, and scratched more people than I can count. Most people have to give a disclaimer for their dog, I had to tell people that came over...my cat bites.

You ate the Christmas tree and all the ribbons every year. It was your favorite time of year. Fitting you would pass during that time. I feel like when I take the tree down this year, I'll find the bald spot where you chewed on it.

But, you were also one of the most loving animals I've ever had. When Josh passed away, you knew we needed some love and you wrapped your love around Abi like no other. You didn't leave her side. Endless nights sitting in her lap while she was drawing and showed her what the love of an animal can heal inside you, even when you don't realize it.

Letting you go was one of the hardest decisions I've ever had to make. But, I know you are young, and well again and sitting in the sunbeam having all the chicken nuggets you can eat. There will never be another one quite like you. RIP Boosie badass. You will always be felt around here my man
