“ Our sweet Foxxie Cleo found us in November of 2005. My hubby called me at work saying "Don't be alarmed, but there is a puppy in the laundry room." He found her at 8-weeks old in our front yard in the pouring down rain. In his words, "I just couldn't leave her there, in the rain. She is so tiny." I was seven months pregnant with our first baby and the last thing we needed was another dog. We walked the neighborhood handing out flyers trying to find her owners. After a week or so of looking with no responses, I named her. Foxxie Cleopatra, well after the movie, for a couple of reasons. She looked like a Fox (or at least I thought she did) and after Beyoncé's character in Austin Powers. It fit her perfectly. She was sassy, loud, crazy, fierce, anyone who saw her commented on her beauty and a whole lot of dog. I mean seriously, she was a beauty. I had never seen a dog like her and probably never will. She was all muscle with a brindle coat that almost looked like a tiger's. She could literally out run cars when she got loose so there was no catching her until she was ready to be caught. Believe me we tried. She was a fierce protector of us. Always letting everyone who met her know that we were her persons (collectively). She drove us crazy the first few years but stole our hearts along the way. What I wouldn't give to pull into the drive way and see her sitting in the window waiting like she had for all those years. Or hear her obnoxious bark as the neighbors worked in their yard. She loved chasing birds and squirrels in the back yard, sitting on the hill which was the perfect view of the street so she could bark at any and everything. She loved catching water out of the water hose, chasing and barking at the vacuum cleaner, lawn mowers, leaf blowers and eating potato chips with me just before bed. She was a member of our family, our baby girl, she was and is loved and she is missed. Every second of every day. My sweet Foxxie Cleo, you were such a sweet girl. The best girl. We love you. We miss you terribly. Until we meet again my sweet girl...run free, where there is nothing broken nothing missing. I hope you've met up with Barkley and Minnie Bell and have an unlimited supply of potato chips. Know that we carry you everywhere we go. Love you sweet girl....
