“ It’s been exactly a month today since we lost our precious Mookie. I still miss you, very much. I keep seeing you in all your favorite spots. When it’s time to feed the other kitties, I want to reach for your food and bowl. I miss you jumping up on my bed and curling up next to me and me petting your head and scratching your ear and under you neck until you fall asleep. I love you Mookie, forever! And I’ll miss you until the day we are together again!

“ You were born Halloween night, 1999. I know this because your mommy, Mew Kitty, had a tummy full of babies at 9:30 that night and the next morning, she didn’t. There was a big bright yellow orange moon that night, that’s why I always called you a Moon kitty. It wasn’t until Christmas morning that we got to see the two bundles of joy, Mew Kitty birthed, almost two months before. I had a choice of grabbing a little gray kitten with one white back foot or grabbing the tiny little gray fluffball with black legs. I chose the latter and your new life with us began. Your first “people food” was Christmas ham, which your mommy indulged in too, of course!
