Friday, October 28th, Sassy Bell Bertie earned her wings. She was preceded in death by her loving sister Dymond "Mush" Bertie. She leaves to cherish her memories, Mom LaVerne, 3 younger siblings Bella, Ginger, and Chai, and a host of family and friends that loved her dearly. Sassy was one the sweetest, easy-going, and most faithful dogs. She had the prettiest brown eyes. Her gaze appeared to peer into a human soul and penetrated their hearts. She was a true beagle that followed her nose. The first week of her arrival she captured two squirrels and a bird. The bird feeders were quickly removed and the birds and squirrels quit visiting. Ironically, on the day of her passing, one of the dogs brought a dead bird into the house. It must have been her parting gift to me. (not funny Sass)

Sarsaparilla, as she was affectionally called was everything but Sassy. She was thoughtful of her sisters, waiting at the door for them to potty. She was triple their size but was so gentle with them. They loved her so much, as we all did.

Coincidentally, while reading Dymond's obituary. My brother Ricky video-called me. He lowered the camera to reveal Sassy laying on the back patio, she appeared to be sleeping. Sadly he explained to me that she was dead! Words cannot express the loss that we experienced on that dreadful day. Somehow reading Dymond's obituary was a preparation for the unfortunate news to come. As if this universe intervened to let us know that Mush and Sassy are together once more and all would be okay.

Sassy would prod our hands to massage her itchy skin due to allergies. We would rub her until she was content. The pillow on which she lay is now empty. As we yearn for just one more cuddle. We know she was tired and ready to go. The usual bay/barking that greeted us has been silenced. She left her paw prints on our hearts. The most unconditional love that one could ever receive. Rest well, our sweet Sassy. Dymond now has a cuddle partner.

Sassy's amazing and short life will be celebrated at a private memorial TBA.
