“ Taz was a gentle soul. He loved people and loved attention. He was a big black dog with alot of fur which made him appear much larger than he was and in his younger years, he had a deep bark. People were often afraid of him but what they didn't know was that he would only have liked them to death given the opportunity and only wanted to give and receive love. He was definitely not a watch dog. He was a blessing to us and we miss him terribly. Twelve and a half years with him was not nearly enough but we are thankful God allowed us be his human parents.
