“ I miss Tiger every day. The day after she died, I took her collar and leash for a walk to the park crying the whole way. It was my tribute walk for her. I love you little ( she was a Lab mix of 65 pounds) girl, my sweet girl.

“ Tiger was the smartest dog we've ever had. She could do all kinds of tricks, sit, shake, roll over, play dead. She was a very sweet dog, without being too sweet. She would give you kisses, not lick you, but actually touch her mouth to yours. Occasionally she would lick too. She loved to swim, and play keep away. She played fetch too. She loved her walks to the neighborhood park, she loved to slide down the slide. She also loved to get a drink from the water fountain. She only drank from the stream of water, never put any part of her mouth on anything else. When she wanted to play, and couldn't find a toy, I could tell her places to check for them and she would look wherever I had told her to look. She was a little bit sneaky. She'd wait until we were all asleep, then find things to get into. One time she got a closed jar of peanut butter opened and ate it, she'd peeled a banana and ate it. Some of her favorite things to sneak was chocolate, and Taco Bell sauce. She always loved going outside in the front yard with me off leash. She would smell the flowers while I was weeding them. She'd want me to stop weeding sometimes, she'd let me know by smelling of my ears, and wanting hugs. She loved hugs, she'd sit down in front of you until you sat down too, then she'd lean into you until you hugged her. She was adopted from the pound at 5-6 weeks old, she was 11 1/2 years old. It's been 2 weeks ago today that we had to put her down. It still hurts so bad. I miss her so much. Goodbye my sweet girl momma loves you.

It's been almost 3 months now that Tiger's been gone. It's still hard, and painful. But it's getting better. I still miss my sweet girl so much. It's not all the time anymore. Momma still loves you little girl.
