

Zo Hinkle

December 1, 2023

"I imagine Zo was dumped and abandoned. I saw her bounding through my back yard in 2011. I started to feed her at my back door. She never let me get close until I saw her limping one day. I sat on my back steps until she came close. I put ointment on her leg until she healed.

I couldn't convince her that life inside with me would be better. One day I made that decision. She howled for a week, but eventually accepted that I was right and her new life began.

She was super bonded to me and my black kitty, Ronnie... not so much anyone else.

She was my fat butter bean and I love her so. We miss her big!

I'm grateful to Dr. Kris and her staff for their loving care at the end of her earthly life." - Jerri

Tribute Wall

JE

“ I imagine Zo was dumped and abandoned. I saw her bounding through my back yard in 2011. I started to feed her at my back door. She never let me get close until I saw her limping one day. I sat on my back steps until she came close. I put ointment on her leg until she healed.

I couldn't convince her that life inside with me would be better. One day I made that decision. She howled for a week, but eventually accepted that I was right and her new life began.

She was super bonded to me and my black kitty, Ronnie... not so much anyone else.

She was my fat butter bean and I love her so. We miss her big! I'm grateful to Dr. Kris and her staff for their loving care at the end of her earthly life.

---

Jerri - December 17, 2023 at 11:14 AM

JD

Kitty, Kitty, Kitty, I am so glad you came into each other's lives. It is quite painful when they leave us behind. Zoe is a beautiful butter bean. You two will be especially in my thoughts today. You often are. Love you Jerri.

---

Jennifer Dorris - December 18, 2023 at 01:20 PM

SM

That is a sweet story that made me cry. So glad she found you! She had a good life because of you 🙏🙏🙏❤️❤️❤️

---

susan Morris - December 23, 2023 at 08:39 PM